

Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Stock markets mixed with Europe and US futures positive, government bond yields down and USD with losses. Optimism on Federal Reserve rate cuts support risk appetite, with focus on further comments from Powell today who will testify to the House Financial Services Committee
- On the monetary policy front, Goolsbee, Bowman, and Cook from the Fed will also speak during the day. Later, the Bank of Korea will announce its decision where it is estimated that it will keep its reference rate unchanged at 3.50%
- Regarding economic figures, in the US final wholesale inventories for May will be published
- In Brazil, inflation for June was released and was better than estimated at +0.21% m/m (consensus: +0.30; previous: +0.46%). With this, the annual metric stood at +4.23% (consensus: +4.32; previous: 3.93%). We expect that this will help moderate inflation expectations that have been increasing, which is a matter of concern for the Copom
- In China, the inflation for June was +0.2% y/y, below consensus (+0.4%y/y) and the previous data (+0.3% y/y)
- In Mexico, today's agenda includes June's ANTAD same-store sales and wage negotiations for the same month

- Microsoft and Apple are surprisingly resigning from being observers on the board of OpenAI in the face of growing scrutiny from antitrust regulators

- The dollar is weak with a mixed balance in G10 currencies where EUR (+0.1%) GBP (+0.2%) lead the gains. In emerging markets, bias is more positive, and the MXN stands out as the strongest, appreciating 0.71% to 17.80 per dollar, its best level vs the USD in a month
- Oil is slightly down, with attention today on DOE inventories as the API projects a drawdown. The monthly OPEC report showed Russia and other members still producing above the quotas of the supply pact. Mixed metals with gold higher

Corporate Debt

- CIBanco (Trustee) informed the amounts to be paid for the early redemption of the MOLYMET 23 issue on July 11, 2024. The redemption price will be $100.0576 per certificate, so the total amount will be MXN 3.4 billion
- HR Ratings upgraded Xignux's ratings to 'HR AAA' from 'HR AA+' with a Stable outlook. The upward revision is based on the strength of the rating metrics, both historical and projected, derived from low debt service levels, as well as low levels of net leverage relative to the level of the generated Free Cash Flow
