

Financial Markets Daily

Main drivers for the financial markets today...

- Stock markets varied with Asia mixed but Europe and US futures down, government bond yields up and USD down. Profit taking in western stock exchanges amid concerns the US will adopt more severe restrictions towards Chinese trade and semiconductors, impacting global tech companies
- Today the Republican National Convention continues, and the focus is on national security and foreign policy issues. Likewise, JD Vance is expected to accept his nomination as vice president in the event of Trump's victory in the presidential election
- On the monetary policy front, the Beige Book will be published and from the Fed Barkin and Waller will speak
- Regarding economic data, in the US, housing starts and construction permits for June were published, with the first at +3.0% m/m, above the consensus expectation of +1.8%, while permits increased 3.4% m/m, well above the +0.1% expected by the consensus. The figures are very positive, but we continue to estimate a negative contribution from residential investment to GDP in 2Q24. Industrial production for June will be released later
- In Mexico we will not have relevant economic data
