Banking credit keeps gathering pace in March

- Today, Banxico published its banking credit report for March 2023
- Banking credit increased 5.6% y/y in real terms, accelerating for a second consecutive month
- Performance was mostly positive. Consumer loans rose 10.3% (previous: 9.6%), still leading. Mortgages accelerated to 4.5% (previous 3.9%), with corporate loans stable at 3.3%
- Non-performing loans (NPLs) remained at 2.3%. In the detail, mortgages and corporates were unchanged at 2.5% and 2.1%, respectively. The index for consumption decreased by 10bps to 2.9%
- We maintain a positive view on loans in the short-term, supported by economic strength, solid fundamentals, and favorable trends in the medium-term

Credit adds a year with positive annual rates. Banking credit to the non-financial private sector increased 5.6% y/y in real terms in March (see Chart 1), adding two months of improvements and above our forecast. In our opinion the result is favorable. We believe credit was supported by: (1) Strong consumption fundamentals, particularly employment; (2) continued business appetite to invest, triggered mainly by nearshoring; and (3) an additional moderation in annual inflation, declining to 6.85% in the period. Nevertheless, we cannot rule out that higher rates, in tandem with an increase in risk perception globally, could have dampened loan demand.

Consumer credit remained as the most dynamic at 10.3% y/y (previous: 9.6%). Inside, four out of five categories showed a higher expansion rate than the previous month, as seen in Chart 2. Categories with the largest acceleration were durable goods at +6.4% (previous: +4.8%) and payrolls at +10.1% (previous: +9.2%). On the contrary, 'others' moderated to +4.7% (previous: +8.5%). Corporate credit was unchanged at 3.3%. Looking at the breakdown, 6 of 13 categories showed higher growth (Table 1). As such, those with the most substantial improvements were real estate services (at 12.9% from 5.6%) and transportation (at 4.7% from -0.9%). On the contrary, sectors with the largest deterioration were mass media (at -29.4% from -7.2%) and primary activities (at -1.5% from 1.5%). Finally, mortgages were also higher at 4.5% (previous: 3.9%). Inside, the residential component rose 4.9% (previous: 4.4%), while low-income housing remained in negative territory at -4.2% (previous: -7.9%).

Non-performing loans unchanged, representing 2.3% of the aggregate portfolio. Inside (Chart 3), we highlight stability in mortgages and corporates at 2.5% and 2.1%, in the same order. For its part, consumption NPLs decreased by 10bps, standing at 2.9%. We consider that low delinquencies, as well as their stability, suggest a proactive management of loan portfolios by financial institutions. Hence, we consider that credit expansion is happening responsibly.

Credit will maintain its strength in coming months. In our view, these results are favorable, consistent with a good performance of the Mexican economy. Considering some timely signals, it is very likely that credit will maintain a strong position in coming months. Some of the factors that should provide support include: (1) A favorable arithmetic effect from a further decline in annual inflation; (2) our expectation that consumer fundamentals will remain solid, particularly employment —which is key for people to access financing; and (3) continued interest in nearshoring-related projects, where we see very relevant momentum in categories such as construction (+163.6% y/y) within corporate loans. Meanwhile, mortgages have also shown signs of acceleration in recent reports, although we believe this has not fully translated to activity.

In addition, the environment for the sector has improved at the margin since the last report, recognizing greater calm in markets following concerns about the US and European banking sectors. While we did not expect a major effect on local credit –noting important regulatory differences and adequate capitalization and liquidity levels, above regulatory minimums among local financial institutions—we believe that the potential for a distortion has diminished. However, we recognize two relevant risks: (1) That the high cost of financing could dampen loan demand, especially considering that we do not anticipate cuts from Banxico for the remainder of the year; and (2) that NPLs rise if a deeper economic slowdown materializes, with some signs that households have increased their overall leverage.
