June inflation - Inflation keeps moderating due to the non-core

- Headline inflation (June): 0.10% m/m; Banorte: 0.07%; consensus: 0.09% (range: 0.0% to 0.15%); previous: -0.22%
- Core inflation (June): 0.30% m/m; Banorte: 0.29%; consensus: 0.28% (range: 0.25% to 0.31%); previous: 0.32%
- The result is quite positive relative to the five-year average at 0.48%. In particular, the non-core fell 0.52%, helped by energy (-1.2%) and agricultural items (-0.2%). The core moderated, now at 0.30%, with Hot Sale discounts helping the performance of 'other goods' (0.1%). Services (0.3%) were affected by seasonal factors, especially in tourism
- Annual inflation dropped to 5.06% from 5.84%, a new low since March 2021. The core also posted a significant decline at 6.89% from 7.39% previously
- Considering recent dynamics, we make a slight adjustment to our yearend inflation forecast, now at 4.5% (previous: 4.8%), with the core at 5.3% (previous: 5.6%). Despite the improvement –with several positive factors already having materialized-, we remain on the look to possible risks going forward, especially for the non-core
- CPI-linked bonds will become more attractive if inflation breakevens go below 4.00%

Inflation at 0.10% m/m. Similar to the previous month, the result is very positive relative to the five-year average at 0.48%. The non-core component keeps providing good news, declining for a fourth consecutive month at -0.52%. Inside, energy (-1.2%) remains supported by LP gas (-7.8%), with modest upticks in lowgrade gasoline (0.3%) and electricity (0.3%). In addition, agricultural items (-0.2%) extended the decline seen in the first fortnight, especially on eggs, chicken and fish. The core (0.30%) was also favorable, moderating at the margin. In goods (0.3%), processed foods (0.4%) maintained a more positive dynamic, registering their smallest monthly increase since December 2020. 'Others' (0.1%) rebounded in the second half, partly on a reversion of Hot Sale discounts, albeit with the net effect being positive in the month. Lastly, services (0.3%) were impacted by airfares (7.1%) due to the start of the holiday period, albeit with 'dining away from home' still high (0.5%). On the contrary, mobile service fell 1.0%.

Document for distribution among the general public

Annual inflation close to breaching the 5% mark to the downside. Headline inflation fell to 5.06% y/y from 5.84% in the previous month, with the core standing at 6.89% from 7.39% in the same order. As we have mentioned, a large part of this is explained by favorable base effects, situation which will continue at least until September or October. More important though: (1) Inflation surprises have been consistently to the downside (see char below); and (2) average headline and core inflation in 2Q23 came in at 5.7% and 7.3%, respectively, matching the latest estimates from Banxico.

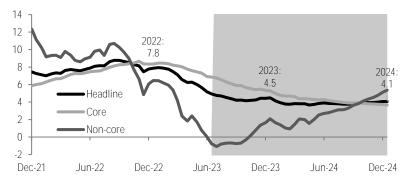

*Nota: Surprises are calculated as the difference between actual data and consensus in Bloomberg's survey Source: Banorte with figures from INEGI and Bloomberg

Small changes to our 2023 year-end forecast after the performance seen in recent months. We adjust our year-end headline inflation forecast from 4.8% to 4.5%. The change is primarily explained by inflation surprises in recent months. The latter pushed our nowcast for headline inflation about 80bps lower than our estimate, to 4.00%. In this regard, we are mainly acknowledging the unexpectedly sharp drop in the non-core component. However, we also add other relevant elements. Regarding energy items, we believe that they will probably remain stable and even with a slight downward trend due to recession fears, led by China. On the other hand, food is a greater concern due to the El Niño phenomenon, as we recently warned, which could have a more prolonged and persistent effect. Specifically, we see more pressures in this category, particularly starting in September. All in all, this category will probably rise, although the advance would be relatively gradual and will likely accumulate towards next year. At the core component, MXN strength is the main factor behind our revision from 5.6% to 5.3% by the end of December. However, we remain cautious on the strength of domestic demand and its potential impact on non-tradable goods and services. The latter component will likely maintain upward pressures due to employment strength. We agree with Banxico on the need to remain vigilant due to the possibility of domestic pressures on price dynamics. We reiterate our forecast that the first central bank cut is likely to be until February next year.

Towards 2024, our main assumptions include: (1) The slowdown of the global economy, especially in the first half of the year, even though the US would experience a modest recession in time and magnitude; (2) increasing difficulties for the USD as the Fed starts its easing cycle, which could also induce pressures on the MXN. (3) the continuation of El Niño, which would be pressure food and energy prices; and (4) a boost to domestic demand due to factors related to the electoral process. With all this in mind, we estimate headline inflation at 4.1%, with the core at 3.7%. The next chart presents our new projections:

From our fixed income and FX strategy team

CPI-linked bonds will become more attractive if inflation breakevens go below 4.00%. Positive inflation surprises have favored fixed-income securities despite a more hawkish Fed tone and its high correlation with US Treasuries. In relative terms, Mbonos outperformed CPI-linked bonds (Udibonos) during June, resulting in lower breakevens for all tenors. In our view, shorter-term Udibonos have become more attractive, especially if breakevens dip below 4.00%. Historically, said level has triggered strong buying interest from pension funds, which are the main holders of these securities (53% of the total amount outstanding). We highlight the 3-year on-the-run Udibono that traded at all-time highs of 5.55% at the start of 2Q23 and is currently at 5.27%, with a breakeven of 4.10%; only 40bps above the 12-month low.
