

Inflation 1H-November – Pressures in meat and egg, along with an unfavorable seasonality

- Headline inflation (1H-Nov): 0.63% 2w/2w; Banorte: 0.62%; consensus: 0.63% (range: 0.46% to 0.69%); previous: 0.13%
- Core inflation (1H-Nov): 0.20% 2w/2w; Banorte: 0.23%; consensus: 0.21% (range: 0.12% to 0.28%); previous: 0.18%
- As is usual, performance was determined by the end of summer discounts to electricity tariffs, resulting in a 22.3% 2w/2w increase. In addition, we noted rises in other categories at the non-core, particularly agricultural items (1.0%) –with relevant pressures in some goods inside. Going to the core, goods (0.3%) had some distortions, especially in ‘other goods’ (0.0%), which we associate to El Buen Fin discounts (Mexico’s Black Friday). Finally, services climbed 0.3%, driven by ‘others’ (0.4%)
- In bi-weekly terms, annual inflation climbed to 4.32% from 4.25%, its first increase in 12 fortnights. The core fell to 5.31% from 5.46%, still helped by a positive base effect, which will end this month
- Considering the performance in the last couple of months and despite the rebound in agricultural goods, risks for our year-end inflation estimate at 5.0% are tilted to the downside
- Attention on Banxico’s minutes later today, expecting additional information on changes to the forward guidance and other factors behind the less hawkish tone

Prices up 0.63% 2w/2w in the 1st half of November. This period is mainly impacted by the end of summer discounts on electricity tariffs –in its second and last tranche–, driving electricity up 22.3%. In other energy items, both LP gas (-0.3%) and low-grade gasoline (-0.2%) moderated, helped by a stronger MXN along with lower international benchmark prices. Also relevant, agricultural goods climbed 1.0%, driven by fruits and vegetables (0.7%) –with large increases in husk tomatoes, tomatoes, and chilies– and in meat and egg –pushed by eggs and chicken, consistent with reports of problems in the sector. At the core (0.20%), goods expanded by 0.1%. We noted the null increase in ‘other goods’ (0.0%), with its performance skewed by some discounts along with upward adjustments ahead of El Buen Fin (Mexico’s Black Friday) –which this year was held between November 17th to the 20th. In processed foods (0.3%) sugar was pressured once again. In services (0.3%), the push came again from ‘others’ (0.4%), both from tourism (e.g. air fares) and non-tourism categories (e.g. professional services and ‘dinning away from home’). Finally, housing rose 0.2%, accelerating at the margin.

Document for distribution among the general public

Performance in previous fortnights implies downside risks to our year-end estimate, despite the rebound in the agricultural sector. With these results, headline inflation rose to 4.32% from 4.25% in the second half of October, breaking with 12 fortnights lower. The adjustment was mainly driven by the non-core, which accelerated to 1.41% from 0.64%. This impulse comes from the agricultural sector, consistent with the rebound in this fortnight. As mentioned in previous posts, we anticipated a stronger push from this category due to more challenging drought conditions through the summer and early autumn. However, and partly based on the performance in today's report, these increases will likely materialize in coming months. In this respect, the risks of additional shocks are relevant, particularly from El Niño. According to NOAA's Climate Prediction Center, the probability of a 'historically strong' event of this phenomenon increased to 35% in November from 30% in October. The effects stemming from it would probably also extend to energy, where a more severe winter would boost demand for gas and other fuels, pushing prices up. At the core –which in the fortnight moderated to 5.31% from 5.46%, still with a positive base effect–, short-term dynamics will be dominated by the El Buen Fin discount period. However, once these distortions are over, goods could remain supported by a strong MXN and further normalization in supply chains. However, we stay cautious on services, where education and 'others' maintain very high rates. All things considered, recent dynamics have inserted relevant downside risks to our year-end inflation estimate of 5%. Nonetheless, we still think the bias is skewed towards higher levels on a longer time horizon, actually anticipating relevant pressures in coming months.

Attention on Banxico's minutes, particularly on the factors behind the shift towards a less hawkish tone. We will focus with special care on the forward guidance, adjusted to reflect that the rate will remain at its current level “for some time” and no longer “for an extended period”. Considering recent comments from Governor Victoria Rodríguez in the press which seem to have ruled out a first cut in December, mentions from other members, along with her view in the document, may give us more color as to the desired timing and/or the conditions that need to materialize for this to happen.
