Flash: Risks in the environment impact share price

Volaris has recorded a significant cumulative drop since its 2Q23 earnings report (July 24, 2024), of ~24% in the share's price. In our opinion, the main factors that have affected the stock's performance are as follows: (1) A rebound in fuel prices since July, although still lower on a y/y comparison; (2) the uncertainty about the evolution of the average fare per passenger, after a decrease of ~15% y/y in the 2Q23, due to a greater supply in the market; and (3) the news that the engines of A320 NEO aircrafts, manufactured from 2015 to 2021, have an earlier-than-anticipated attrition issue, which derived on more maintenance than anticipated, and in that sense, affecting the expected growth in capacity. RTX Corp., the parent company of Pratt & Whitney, which makes the engines, said it will perform accelerated teardowns and inspections on about 200 of all its customers' engines starting next month and reaching ~1,000 by next year.

Regarding the first point, the expectation aims at an improvement in rates for the second half of the year, which is seasonally stronger; however, we will closely monitor the dynamics of the pricing environment. As for the third factor, even if the company could adjust downward the guidance in terms of capacity (+13%e in 2Q23 vs. +10%e previously), we do not believe that the update will be significant, since the largest increase occurred in 1H23 (+18% y/y), and compensation from the supplier is not ruled out. In the meantime, we will be monitoring any information on the situation, since the airline has a fleet of 123 aircraft and ~42% could be subject to a gradual inspection, thus the impact on the operation should not be so relevant.

In our view, at current price levels, valuation already incorporates these risks (6.5x FV/EBITDAR vs. 6.9x sector average). Likewise, although volatility in the share's price could continue, the outlook remains strong on growth, accompanied by a recovery in profitability, coupled with the company's leadership position in the industry. This leads us to reiterate our Buy recommendation on Volaris.
